mid-15th to mid-19th century – obsolete forms of farming in agriculture

The period deals with the long development period, which later flooded the municipalities in accordance with the development of the Moravian countryside from the early modern period to the beginnings of the formation of civil society, the life of the inhabitants influenced the serfdom, the subservience, the robot work and the supremacy of the owners of the estate. Growing grain and livestock farming was based on low-performing agricultural production, with an already obsolete three field system, sufficient soil fertilization could not be done for small cattle housing.
